

THE STRAITS TIMES

RECRUIT

Classified Jobs 1800-289-9988 • www.sphclass.com.sg/recruit • Executive Appointments 1800-289-8822

Make a difference – Build the future of Singapore's healthcare

MOH HOLDINGS

www.mohh.com.sg/careers

oday is Saturday. For most of the world, you're finished for this week's work. Somewhere at every moment, people are finishing things they started. A job, a relationship, a run, a meal...

Finishing is rare today.

Don't you notice how we move from one thing to the next as if it were a swipe of the iPad? In an instant, we "move on". Our minds are distracted, our worlds are constantly moving, and as a result, change often keeps us from completing what we started. Oh I'm a complete train wreck sometimes when I go out online. One link leads to another page that leads to an email that leads to a text. Just as I'm trying to finish up, a phone call comes through.

When I run, no matter how hard the terrain, how bad the weather, how far I have to go, the finish line is what I embrace most. It simply feels fabulous, finishing. The challenge is that today's world gives us a lot of choice and opportunity. With that comes a lot of noise to take a different course. What are you doing today to finish what you started?

So how do we finish strong? Focus.

The key to a good finish in the marathon or really in anything is focus. Focus comes with good discipline and preparation. Running is a unique sport in that it's just me, my body and the road. When I run, I often go alone. It gives me the ability to practice focus. If I tune in right and listen to myself, I regulate my movement, and know when to speed up and slow down while maintaining my eye on the end game. Do you have a way you practice focus? What are you doing today to help drive greater focus in your work and life?

Finishing isn't easy. Failure happens. Every race, job and relationship has taught me something along the route.

F is for a Few Things

Katie Mehnert finds much Food for thought in the letter F.

And failure happens. Sometimes it's the small holes in the pavement that we don't see. We're blind because our egos get in the way. Or sometimes we get sucked into the big ones. But we dig our way out. And when they reappear, we go around them or through them. Sometimes, we create new routes or races to avoid them. In the end, we learn through the pain of failure. We never understand the "why this, why me" then, but when we look back at the race, we have a full appreciation for the journey we've taken to get to the finish line. My friend, if you don't fail enough, you ought to start. What are you doing to fail and learn from your failures?

Never ever waste a good setback. The beauty is in the feedback.

Every response is a form of feedback. And setbacks are your platform for comebacks.

Your job is to look for the trends, acknowledge the reality of perception and figure a way to get better. This can happen in the moment or over time. Setbacks are the best forms of feedback.

I hit my first "wall" in the New York Marathon in 2011, just nine months after having my child. What got me there? Sheer exhaustion, a lack of focus, and a fear I wouldn't finish. In a moment of despair I texted my husband. He told me I didn't come this far to stop and encouraged me to keep going. No matter what, just put each foot in front of the other and I would eventually begin running again. In that moment, I was already off course, terribly behind my goal, and ready to give in. I stopped, pulled up my big girl pants and restarted. I walked, and at times I crawled, but I grew stronger because of that setback. How are you embracing feedback in the moment?

Create a clear path, my friend. Focus. Drown out the noise. Along the way, allow yourself to fail. It's okay. It's normal. Take every piece of feedback in your stride, knowing that the next step you take is getting you closer to your finish line.

Katie Mehnert (pictured) is a global talent development and change executive with 17 years of helping people and companies get curious, connect, share, grow and perform better. She has recently been appointed CEO of Pink Petro; www.pinkpetro.com, a platform to connect women and men in the energy industry and advance females in her industry. Prior to her latest venture, Katie was a Director with BP, joining after the Deepwater Horizon incident and worked in various leadership roles worldwide with Shell. She's a dynamic speaker and author having been featured in LinkedIn, CEO.com, Business Insider, and Yahoo. As a work-inprogress marathon runner, wife and working mom, you can follow her musings on balancing it all on her blog at www.katiemehnert.com, or email her at katie@katiemehnert.com

